Have you learned to grow a bit fearful of fulk-stant they often are women —who proudly declare themselves the greatest of talkers, and then straightway proceed to disprove the assertion, because they are no more than makers of words? Oh, yes, the words go on and on forever like the thefees

all been measured up, nothing at all

And part of the trouble is because they so ishoriously pad out their stories

The want to be good listeners, and do want to grow impatient, perhaps too ily wearled; but we do draw the line the long-drawn-out stories teeming a what "I" thought and said, and "be" fett and acted, and every to that was made.

Only Few Good Talkers.

It is said that those who had the form to haps Robert Louis Stovenson's were charmed most of all by delicate way of emphasing exactly right thing. He had the grace to it things interesting to him alone, and talk went along with infinite charm. It senty the few who are really good kers, but all of us can sit at the feet a man like Stevenson and learn one me-to skip the wearlsome ins and if of happenings that may seem plut entertaining to us, but may epil for the present of the colour to others. Purhaps we do not cays realize when a story is creeping to a wearisome extent, because colds my to be kind and tolerant and ident, and do not like to show the arbives they often may feet. But it well to remember that when they me to be listening and to be following a detail, lay may be longing, for chance to stold away, ceause, tempting as it may be to run hour joys or our work to a symptop over the line of reason and bene nothing better than a bore.

to step over the line of reason and become nothing better than a bore.

Indeed, the divine gift of sympathy is pretly rare, and we soon enough learn that most of folk are far more ready with a story of their own than to lead a patient ear to a long rectial in which they play no part at all.

And Dere are times when nobody can been in confortable learning delancement of the confortable learning delancement in the confortable learning learning about the head and to this is attached that monotonously droned along, with sourcely a purse to give unbappy littingers a chance to reply. Of course you have, and of course the thought has come that it is a sorry trick of fate to be obliged to go on literaing to that voke day after day. "A great talker!"

Barely Say Asything Worth While.

File worst filing about those self-styled talkers is that they seremely give unterance to every thought that comes into their heads. Indeed, the longer our lives the more apparent it becomes that folk who rattle off the busient stream of words rarely say very much, after all.

And it ought not to be no very difficult to cultivate the grace of silence when me has nothing to say.

Do you know, we miss a lot in this learning the converted to the time and holding it out almost with the effect of a wire.
